Explain why the new curriculum is needed. For example, does it reflect disciplinary content that augments existing degree programs? Does it address regional industry needs? How does the curriculum align with the mission of the college?

In the workforce, many employers are seeking applicants who have the ability to analyze the changing needs of their discipline so that they can better serve their communities. A minor in sociology provides students with the necessary skills to critically examine how social changes on both a local and global level impact their discipline. With specific courses geared toward areas such as education and health services, this minor is designed to complement existing degree programs by teaching students to evaluate issues specific to their discipline within the broader social context.
